WHAT WERE THE CAUSES OF WWI?

Recent war has been a turning point in history. Many nations study the war and what caused the huge conflict. Germany is not the only one responsible for the war. Subsequent countries had a role, the blame was gradually put on the other great powers of Europe as well. In this essay, we will analyze the main causes of WWI - by re-examining the complex causes and if these reasons and events may be classified into a main theme: imperialism. The second subject, nationalism is discussed.

Imperialism is attributed greatly to the outbreak of WWI. Imperialism is when a country takes over other lands and subjects them to their rule to extend their power and influence. After WWI, the great powers of Europe tried to establish colonies. Germany, who got involved in Africa before in 1871, became a major imperialist country, who after the late 19th century had stretched out over 3 continents and claimed about 10% of the world's surface. Germany was not alone in this, but it was, however, through this, that the world powers of this age, Austria-Hungary, France, Italy, and the United States of America, followed the same strategy. The USA, France, and Italy had colonies, but of course, Germany was the one that was most aggressive in this regard.

In 1871, after a victory over France, Germany had a strong desire to put some of its colonies in Africa and Asia. The French competition was very strong in Africa, but Germany wanted to get into Africa, too. The country wanted to get into Africa, too. The country wanted to get into Africa, too.

The war could be seen as the first step in a series of events. France, Germany, and the United States were all in a state of competition. France, Germany, and the United States were all in a state of competition. France, Germany, and the United States were all in a state of competition.

Another reason for the war was nationalism. Many of the nations that were involved in the war were very proud of their own country and wanted to be the best. This was a major cause of the war.
